Dick Smith Electronics gets iBurst broadband

Australia's true mobile broadband technology, iBurst, is now available leading retail group Dick Smith Electronics. Offered in store by internet provider and Personal Broadband Australia partner Chilli Internet Solutions, the service is now available from Dick Smith Electronics, PowerHouse and other retail outlets in Sydney, Melbourne, Canberra, Brisbane and on the Gold Coast.

iBurst technology provides true mobile broadband which allows users to surf the web, bank online or send and receive email anywhere within the coverage area. The iBurst broadband service brings the same flexibility to a laptop as mobile phones can bring to a phone call.

"Working with Dick Smith Electronics provides us with the perfect outlet to make iBurst wireless broadband service more accessible," said Victor Guerrero, General Manager, Chilli Internet Solutions.

"Wireless broadband is the hot new property in broadband," commented Al Dick Smith Electronics Merchandise Manager for Communications. "The iBurst technology, supported by Chilli's competitive plans, gives our customers access to the very latest in broadband services."

iBurst allows broadband deprived consumers to ditch dial-up, and is a next generation alternative to fixed-line broadband such as ADSL or cable, with far greater flexibility both in terms of the initial set up of the service, and in taking it from place to place.

The service works both inside and outside buildings across urban and suburban areas in the major capital cities in Australia. A go anywhere iBurst connection is supported by hotspots, beating them on value for money and convenience, but more importantly, security, thanks to iBurst's Intellicell secure wireless encryption data security technology.

Few other internet tools offer more in flexibility than an iBurst mobile broadband connection that lets you access email, the web and corporate applications not only anywhere in the home, but also from the backseat of a moving taxi, an airport or even in the reception of the office that your next meeting is in.
